HINSDALE, Du Page County, Illinois, is located 17 miles from Chicago, on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, and has at present about 2000 inhabitants. . . . . .

The town was laid out by Mr. Wm. Robbins and Mr. O. J. Stough in 1866, and its beautiful situation on high rolling ground, covered with fine shade trees, its abundant supply of good and pure water, natural drainage, and easy accessibility to the City make it one of the most desirable places of residence in the vicinity of Chicago.

Hinsdale has a goodly number of Substantial Buildings, including Public Schools, Churches and Stores, and many elegant Private Dwellings. . . . . .

The houses are built well back from the street, leaving spacious and nicely kept lawns in front. The streets are wide and are lined with trees of many years growth, while no unsightly buildings mar the beauty of the place.

The accompanying illustrations will serve to give the reader a fair idea of this pleasant suburban town, they are exact reproductions of photographic negatives, made during the past summer and autumn, and are as truthful as a good camera and fine lens could make them. . .
